RESEARCH ETHICAL COMMITTEE

INTRODUCTION

The Research Ethics Committee (REC) oversees ethical standards in research involving human subjects, ensuring their rights and well-being are protected. Composed of multidisciplinary experts and community representatives, the REC upholds ethical principles, and regulatory standards, and promotes transparency in research practices, fostering trust in the research process.

Aim

The aim of the Research Ethics Committee (REC) is to safeguard the rights, welfare, and dignity of human research participants by ensuring that research is conducted ethically and responsibly.

OBJECTIVES

- To guarantee the protection of study participants' rights.
- To authorize research projects while upholding the associated ethical standards.
- To encourage a culture of research among teachers and students.
- To recommend modifications to the study to raise the standard of research
- To support the institute's integrative, trans-disciplinary, and evidence-based research

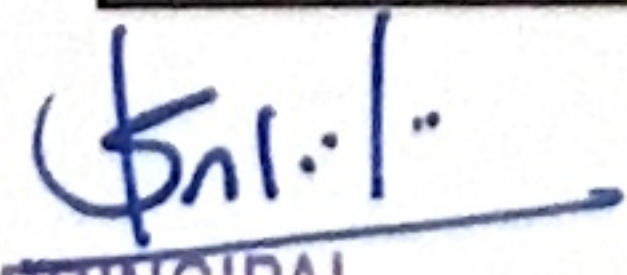

ACTIVITIES

- Reviewing research proposals to ensure compliance with ethical principles and regulatory standards.
- Evaluating the risks and benefits associated with research involving human participants.
- Assessing the informed consent process to ensure participants' understanding and voluntary participation.

- Monitoring ongoing research to ensure adherence to approved protocols and ethical guidelines.
- Investigating and addressing any ethical concerns or breaches that arise during the research process.
- Providing guidance and training to researchers on ethical principles and best practices.
- Collaborating with institutional authorities and regulatory bodies to ensure oversight and compliance.
- Educating the research community and the public about ethical considerations in research involving human subjects.
- Continuously updating policies and procedures to reflect evolving ethical standards and emerging ethical challenges.
- Promoting transparency and accountability in research by maintaining records and documentation of ethical review processes.
